Cases made against, for council reduction

- Councillors Outhit, Hum suggest boundary review committees be independent
- Decision on council size expected within 4 months
- Consultant hired by board suggests 20-member council way to go

Some speakers urged courage and others caution at the Nova Scotia Utility and Review Board hearing into the size of Halifax regional council last night.

"I'm asking you to be wise and brave and not come down and say 20 because it's a compromise," said Paula Minnikin, representing Citizens of Halifax.

She said council should be trimmed from the current 23 councillors to 14.

Mayor Peter Kelly, Halifax Chamber of Commerce president Valerie Payn and Coun. Tim Outhit also pressed the case for a smaller council.

"I believe a smaller council represents the sentiments of HRM residents," said Kelly, who proposed a number of 16 plus the mayor.

He quoted several polls that show growing support for council reduction.

RYAN TAPLIN/METRO

"All voices would still be heard, as they are in other Canadian cities of similar size to us, but which have fewer elected representatives than we do."

MAYOR PETER KELLY TO UARB

He added he doesn't believe this would mean a bigger workload for the remaining councillors, and if it did, savings could be used to hire more staff.

Coun. Linda Mosher told the board the workload already involves 12-hour days and 100 emails a day. A smaller council will also weaken HRM's clout with the province, she said.

"Clearly, in this UARB hearing, the lack of public participation indicates satisfaction."

The fact that the hearing only drew 19 letters and 10 speakers — most of whom were part of "special-interest groups" — shows residents don't care that much, Mosher added.

Outhit and Coun. Debbie Hum raised their concerns about the boundary review committee, which was composed of the mayor and six councillors. The committee's suggestions to reduce districts were voted down at council in August.

"The objectivity of many councillors involved, including my own, is questionable," Outhit said.

- Dexter expects decision on proposed convention centre in 'near future'
- Premier says Harper 'very relaxed' in first post-election meeting together

Premier Darrell Dexter said he had a constructive meeting with Prime Minister Stephen Harper yesterday — a meeting devoted to reiterating the importance of a number of big-ticket items the province is waiting on for a federal commitment.

Dexter said the conversation ranged from the proposed downtown convention centre, to the National Shipbuilding Procurement Strategy, to the Lower Churchill Falls hydroelectric project.

"This was really a forward-looking meeting. We were looking to a number of issues that affect both the province and the federal government," Dexter told Metro last night.

The proposed convention centre, now five months overdue for an agreement between the three levels of government, figured prominently in their discussions.

"I had the opportunity to reiterate that we have a very patient developer

"We now are able to map out how we're going to proceed with each one of these projects."

who has been holding on to that property now for some time," Dexter said, "and that it was really incumbent upon us to be in a position to give him a final answer on this project in the very near future."

Dexter said he came away with the impression that the project will have a decision in the "fairly near future."

"We cannot expect the developer to continue to absorb the cost of holding that property for very much longer," said Dexter.

"The prime minister certainly understood that, and as I said, I can't speak to directly to what the prime minister said to me ... but I certainly got the impression that he very much understood what the position of the province and the developer was."

Date set for volleyball coach's trial

A Dartmouth volleyball coach facing sex charges involving a teenage girl is scheduled to go to trial early next year.

Joseph Emile (Luc) Potvin, 53, was arrested on May 13 and is facing six charges, including luring a child, sexual assault, production of child pornography and distribution of child pornography.

Potvin pleaded not guilty to the charges yesterday, and a one-day trial date was set for Feb. 8, 2012 at Dartmouth provincial court. A pre-trial conference will also take place on July 26.

Potvin remains out on bail under conditions set in late May, including a curfew of 7 p.m. to 7 a.m., no contact with anyone under the age of 18 unless an adult is present and a ban on using a cellphone.

Police investigated Potvin after they received a complaint regarding his conduct with a 17-year-old girl. ● PHILIP CROUCHER

Gun, drugs seized in raid

Keen observation netted a couple of arrests for drugs and weapons possession.

Halifax Regional Police say officers noticed a man allegedly engaged in drug transactions from his car around 9:20 p.m. on Friday on the Bedford Highway.

Just after 2 a.m. on Saturday, police say they searched a nearby residence and seized a handgun, ammunition and cash, as well as crack cocaine, and ecstasy. A woman returned home while police were searching and she, too, was arrested.

Colin Nicolas Paris, 39, and Krista Langille, 34, are facing drug and weapons charges. ● METRO

The anti-cervine sentiment was born when a rampaging deer broke through a ground-level window at the Halifax coffee shop yesterday morning.

According to owner Gordon Stevens, about six customers and staff were in the shop at the time.

The deer thrashed over tables and furniture before smashing through another panel of the plate-glass window to escape.

"He was in the main cafe area and then he must have went down by the washrooms, in behind the counter," Stevens said at the shop yesterday. "He knocked over everything in his

Nobody was hurt in the incident, and the deer was apprehended and tranquilized shortly thereafter by Department of Natural Resources staff at a construction site on nearby Saint Mary's University campus.

"It looks like ... there's no structural damage, meaning probably no limbs broken," said DNR spokesman Bruce Nunn.

"And the way that (the deer) dashed down the street after it was shot (with a tranquilizer), it would appear that its limbs were OK."

The deer was transported outside the city by DNR

Stevens said the Uncommon group will not be taking any precautions to prevent future incidents with deer.

Forfeiture Act passes first test

A Nova Scotia Supreme Court justice has granted an interim order forfeiting money seized in a Sydney Mines drug raid to the province, in the first use of Nova Scotia's Civil Forfeiture Act.

Following a hearing yesterday in Sydney, Justice Cindy Bourgeois ruled the order requested

The province is looking to seize the $5,725 that was seized in a drug raid in Sydney Mines on Feb. 18. John Joseph Reynolds, 36, is charged with two counts of marijuana possession.

Bourgeois issued the order even though the charges against Reynolds, a single father of three, are expected to be withdrawn when he appears in Sydney court today.

► To date, all four men facing charges have been represented in court by their lawyers

Legal proceedings continue today for three of the four men charged following a police investigation into alleged spending abuses by four provincial politicians.

One current and two former members of the legislature are scheduled to appear in Halifax provincial court.

Former Conservative Richard Hurlburt returns for election and plea, while a preliminary-hearing date is expected to be set for former Liberal Russell MacKinnon, who elected trial by Supreme Court judge alone during an April court appearance.

Hurlburt, a former cabinet minister, faces three counts of uttering a forged document.

MacKinnon faces 10 counts, one each of fraud and breach of trust, while the remaining eight are related to uttering false expense accounts.

A preliminary hearing is also expected to be set for independent member Trevor Zinck, who last month pleaded not guilty to charges of theft over $5,000, fraud over $5,000 and breach of trust.

RCMP laid the charges in February after a nine-month criminal investigation. The probe began after auditor general Jacques Lapointe handed over forensic audit files on specific transactions involving five former and one current member of the legislature.

Details of the allegations made in Lapointe's audit are not known.

The audit was a followup to a report Lapointe released in February 2010 that uncovered several cases of excessive and inappropriate spending of constituency funds.

Workplace mental health issues exposed

Mental illness in the workplace is a huge issue hiding in plain sight, a situation made clear in a report released yesterday by the Conference Board of Canada.

The report, Building Mentally Healthy Workplaces, is based on a national survey of more than 1,000 employees — including almost 500 front-line managers, with follow-up interviews for some. The findings bookend a new initiative by the Mental Health Commission of Canada to establish national standards for psychologically healthy workplaces.

"When it comes to mental health, misinformation, fear and prejudice remain far too prevalent," the Conference Board report says. "It is time for a change."

The report says that in 2009-10, "78 per cent of short-term disability claims and 67 per cent of long-term disability claims in Canada were related to mental-health issues."

The Conference Board found that 12 per cent of its survey respondents were currently experiencing mental-health issues.

Girl forced to wear bomb vest: Police

► Pakistani authorities say suicide-bomb vest contained nearly nine kilograms of explosives

Police said yesterday that militants kidnapped a nine-year-old girl on her way to school and forced her to wear a suicide-bomb vest. The girl and police said she managed to escape her captors as they directed her to attack a paramilitary checkpoint in northwest Pakistan.

Sohana Jawed, who is in Grade 3, said she was abducted near her home in the northwestern city of Peshawar on Saturday and taken to Lower Dir district, a four hours' drive away.

Police in Lower Dir presented Jawed at a news conference, where she told her story dressed in her blue and white school uniform. But police in Peshawar said they haven't received a complaint of a missing girl and haven't identified a resident with her name.

Masters of our domain name

METRO WORLD NEWS

So long, dot-com era; hello, dot-whatever. The world of website names is about to undergo a revolution, with anyone allowed to choose whatever suffix they want for their website, including ideograms and Arabic characters.

At the moment, a web address can end with one of only 22 suffixes: .com, .org and .net, for example. But in the near future, websites could end with tailored suffixes such as .kids, .shop or .hal for Halifax.

The body in charge of deciding the rules for website names, ICANN (International Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers), said yesterday that it will open up the market of address endings, also known as gTLD's, generic top level domains.

The group, based in Marina del Rey, Calif., called it "one of the biggest changes ever" to the Internet naming system.

The Internet community, governments and companies have been pressing for open domain name extensions for years. But with a customized domain expected to cost about $185,000, only big organizations are expected to apply for now.

Technology writer Robin Wauters, of TechCrunch.com, said the decision could have "the most repercussions ever taken by ICANN since the introduction of .com."

But while the move may offer good branding opportunities for companies, organizations and cities, he warned that the new domain name extensions could end up causing confusion. And there is no way to predict if the advantages of owning a "brand domain" will justify the high cost.

Coming in on a high note

Canada is switching to polymer banknotes to replace paper-cotton bills that wear and tear more easily. The first to go plastic will be the $50 and $100 bills. Polymer banknotes are more durable and harder to fake than paper money.

Google to digitize historic tomes

A treatise on a stuffed hippopotamus, an 18th-century English primer for Danish sailors and a description of the first engine-driven submarine are among 250,000 books to be made available online in a deal between Google and the British Library.

The arrangement will let Internet users read, download and copy thousands of texts published between 1700 and 1870. The books range from Georges Louis Leclerc's Natural History of the Hippopotamus, or River Horse — which includes a description of a stuffed animal owned by the Prince of Orange — to the 1858 work A Scheme for Underwater Seafaring, about the first combustion engine-driven submarine.

ZEROING IN ON ZERO WASTE

Did you know that when you look at North America from space, the highest point of land on the eastern seaboard is a landfill site? Now more than ever, we need to reduce, reuse and recycle.

What do you put in your garbage? Some people throw out old clothes when they can be recycled or even torn up and used as rags. A lot of food and beverage containers end up in the garbage when all you have to do is clean them out and put them into the blue box. And, of course, paper documents belong in the recycling bin too. Then there's packaging — Canadians throw away about half a kilogram of packaging each and every day, says Gill Deacon, author of Green for Life and more recently There's Lead in Your Lipstick (both Penguin Books).

Deacon and other waste experts point to the zero waste philosophy as a way to live your life — and make positive environmental changes.

"Zero waste is a philosophy and a goal to work towards," says Craig Bartlett, Manager, Waste Operations for the Region of Durham in Ontario. "Because everyone would like to see the end of garbage as we know it."

The zero waste philosophy encourages the redesign of products and resources so that all products can re-used in some way — and the amount of garbage sent to landfill minimized. It also puts the onus on everyone to reduce the amount of waste they generate.

At the same time, Jed Goldberg, president, Earth Day Canada, says it's important to remember that waste is not just something you throw into the blue box or garbage. "It's actually a measure of inefficiency. Waste is anything that's used that doesn't need to be used. It could be fuel in your car."

What we really have to do, he says, is change our attitudes about waste and even its description. "It's not garbage, it's not recycling; it's using resources that don't need to be used."

THE BIG PICTURE

ARLESTOCK.COM/THINKSTOCK

A SHIFT IN THINKING HAS MADE WASTE REDUCTION A NEW WAY TO DO BUSINESS

“Zero waste has positioned people to think of recycling as a business opportunity,” says Rob Cook, Chief Executive Officer, at the Ontario Waste Management Association, a non-profit organization that represents private-sector service providers.

“Over the last 10 to 15 years, we’ve recognized that landfill may not be the best way to deal with all materials,” he says. “And people now look on at resource recovery as economically beneficial.”

In the past, products were cradle-to-grave — you bought a product, used it and it ended up in the garbage.

“Now when we talk about packaging and other materials, a good cradle-to-cradle lifespan is the goal,” says Bartlett — and that means the product isn’t thrown out but recycled in some way into something else.

Items once thought as garbage are now used in other ways. For example, there’s little scrap metal that ends up in landfill because metal is so valuable. There are technologies that can turn plastic water bottles into high value fabric or into biofuels. There are also programs to recycle toilets and sinks, and possibly shingles.

Landfill is always the last option after reduce, reuse, recycle.

WHAT IS EXTENDED PRODUCER RESPONSIBILITY?

Environment Canada explains that as a policy approach, it’s when a producer’s responsibility for a product is extended to the post-consumer stage of the product’s life cycle. What that means is producers are increasingly looking at ways to incorporate environmental considerations in the design of their products.

ENVIRONMENTAL SEATING PLAN

Green Chair Events, Vancouver, is sitting pretty. The company plans and creates affordable and sustainable events, and it was recently recognized by Earth Day Canada with a 2011 Hometown Heroes Small Business award.

“We are the missing link in reducing waste between governments and organizers at events who put on things,” explains company spokesperson Liliana Segal. “Our goal is to make sure all garbage and waste goes to the right place and gets reduced, reused and recycled.”

To reduce waste in the workplace, Green Chair Events suggests that businesses renegotiate flat rate garbage disposal fees so that billing is done by the amount of garbage generated.

STUDENTS GET TOP MARKS IN RECYCLING EFFORTS

Last fall students from 70 schools in six provinces participated in the Recycle My Cell Challenge and collected almost 4,000 wireless devices as well as close to 200 kilograms of batteries and other wireless accessories. Way to go!

SUGARCANE ETHANOL FROM BRAZIL

Coca-Cola Canada uses sugarcane ethanol feedstocks in Brazil for its PlantBottle packaging. The sugarcane is considered an advanced renewal fuel by the Environmental Protection Agency and is the only first generation biofuel widely recognized around the world for its unique environmental and social performance.

THINGS GO BETTER WITH — PLANTS!

Thirsty for something good? Coca-Cola Canada is now using plant-based materials in its new Dasani water bottle.

The company created its innovative PlantBottle™ packaging through a process that turns sugarcane into a key component of PET plastic. And, it is entirely recyclable in existing systems.

The Dasani PlantBottle is made from up to 30 per cent plant-based materials. The Company’s long-term goal is to reach a 100 per cent plant-based package for all of its products.

“It’s our goal to make traditional plastic bottles a thing of the past and ensure that every beverage we produce is available in 100 per cent plant-based, fully recyclable packaging,” says Scott Vitters, general manager, PlantBottle Packaging Platform, The Coca-Cola Company.

The PlantBottle also helps the company reduce its carbon footprint, says Vitters. Traditional PET bottles are made from petroleum and other nonrenewable fossil fuels. But incorporating a blend of petroleum-based materials with up to 30 per cent plant-based materials means Dasani packaging reduces potential intrinsic carbon dioxide emissions when compared with PET plastic bottles.

REDUCE YOUR WASTE: IT'S EASIER THAN YOU THINK

MICHALAK STRESSES THAT ONE PERSON CAN DO A LOT TO ENCOUR- AGE CHANGE AND MAKE A DIFFERENCE

Five years ago, Rene Michalak, co-ordinator of Rethink Red Deer, a local citizen action group, started Garbage Free February as a personal challenge. The goal was to make choices that would not produce garbage and contribute to landfill, and he blogged about his experience online. Several friends took the challenge with him the next year. In year three, a dozen or so people, as well as a few businesses, took part. "Now I can't keep track anymore," says Michalak, who is also Network Manager for the Alberta Environmental Network in Red Deer, Alta. Garbage-Free February has become a community success story, and this year it may partner with the Recycling Council of Alberta.

Michalak stresses that one person can do a lot to encourage change and make a difference. Of course, one way to do that is to start thinking about what you throw out — can you divert it in some way?

Here is a checklist of other ways to reduce waste.

- Purchase recyclable and reusable goods only.
- When you see over-packaged items in retail stores, complain. That's what Jed Goldberg of Earth Day Canada did when he saw a plastic-wrapped coconut — and the store stopped doing it.
- Don't buy over packaged products — or leave the extra packaging with the retailer.
- When there's an option, always choose the product with less packaging (for example, a roll of stamps, not the large, flat package).
- Buy in bulk.
- Buy second-hand. Check websites such as Craigslist and Kijiji, and stores such as Value Village.
- Think about all the products you buy — how they are made and how you will dispose of them.
- Bring your own carry bags when you are shopping.
- Be a good role model — always practice and share positive environmental habits.
- Use re-useable coffee mugs — bring them to your favourite coffee store and the office. Avoid Styrofoam completely.
- Compost organic waste. Use the municipal green bin program if available or compost in your yard.

RESULTS

YOUR WASTE REDUCTION PERSONALITY

UNDER 10 POINTS:

Shame on you. It's time to join the war on waste... and it's really not difficult to make a difference. Reduce, reuse and recycle.

OVER 10 POINTS:

You're on the right track but could be more pro-active in helping to make the world a better place – by creating less waste and protecting natural resources.

OVER 20 POINTS:

You are an Eco Warrior leading yourself and your family and friends, no doubt, in the war on waste! Pat yourself on the back — and keep doing what you're doing!

TRIM YOUR WASTE

Rethinking your relationship with waste is one of the most powerful ways you can help stop climate change. Canadians produced an average of 837 kilograms of non-hazardous solid waste in 2006, all of which goes straight into a landfill. Landfills produce about one quarter of Canada's methane emissions — and methane is a greenhouse gas more powerful than carbon dioxide.

Here's what you can do:

REDUCE FOOD WASTE

Throwing away food is a waste of money, time and energy. Learn how to keep your fruits and veggies fresh and edible for as long as possible

RECYCLE

Making sure to take our paper, plastic, and bottles and cans to the blue box recycling bins makes a huge difference on how much waste ends up in landfills. Unsure of what can be recycled? Read about the recycling resources in your city for more info.

COMPOST

Your garbage is about 40 per cent organic waste — composting can help divert that matter from producing dangerous greenhouse gases. You don't need a yard to compost — learn how to turn your kitchen "waste" into black gold!

BE A SMART CONSUMER

Companies still produce goods that have a limited lifespan so that the consumer cycle can continue. By choosing not to buy products that are over-packaged or "disposable," you are encouraging producers to be more responsible.

The small choices we make every day can make a big difference. Like choosing to print this feature on 100% recycled paper. Or by choosing the Dasani PlantBottle, made from up to 30% plants and still 100% recyclable. Because 30% less is 30% more for the environment.

HEAT CAN PLAY HAVOC WITH STYLE

SHE SAYS ...

JESSICA NAPIER
METRO

There is nothing as short and sweet as a Canadian summer. For three, maybe four, months of the year we come out of hibernation, blissfully shedding our layers of fur, fleece and goose down and remember what it's like to feel the warmth of real sunlight against our skin. However, while it's nearly impossible to dress to impress in minus-30 temperatures, looking good in the sweltering heat can be just as difficult.

As the humidex increases, the combination of greasy sunscreen and perspiration causes my carefully applied makeup to melt off my face by midday. While strolling through the city, the soles of my sandal-clad feet become caked in layers of dirt and grime. My penchant for white sundresses means I typically end up with a very obvious Jackson Pollock-esque collection of coffee, ice cream and ketchup stains all over myself.

"My penchant for white sundresses means I typically end up with a very obvious Jackson Pollock-esque collection of coffee, ice cream and ketchup stains all over myself."

swimwear during the summer months — regardless of whether or not the venue necessitates waterproof apparel. For certain misguided individuals a bikini top becomes a perfectly acceptable substitute for a bra, or even a shirt.

Exhibitionists aside, most of us — no matter what size, sex or age — really hate putting on a bathing suit.

Somehow, I always manage to convince myself that I will feel much better about being nearly nude when poolside if I just buy myself a new bather. However, about 10 minutes into the experience I inevitably remember that stripping down in a badly lit fitting room to try on a two-piece is a horribly mortifying way to spend an afternoon. If you absolutely must go bathing-suit shopping this season, I recommend doing it online or immediately following a bout of stomach flu.

But I'll quit my whining now. Because even though ill-fitting swimsuits, frizzy hair and sweaty skin have me feeling like a hot mess this summer, I know it will be over far too soon.

Worth mentioning

WASHINGTON. Sea levels have been rising significantly over the past century of global warming, according to a study that offers the most detailed look yet at the changes in ocean levels during the last 2,100 years.

Researchers found that since the late 19th century — as the world became industrialized — the sea level has risen more than two millimetres per year, on average. That is a little less than one-tenth of an inch, but it adds up over time.

It will lead to land loss, more flooding and saltwater invading bodies of fresh water, said lead researcher Benjamin Horton, whose team examined sediment from the state of North Carolina's Outer Banks. He directs the Sea Level Research Laboratory at the University of Pennsylvania.

The predicted effects he cites are not new and are predicted by many climate scientists. But outside experts say the research verifies increasing sea-level rise compared to previous centuries. Horton said rising temperatures are the reason behind the higher sea level.

But police are staying off the case — the burglar really is a cat.

Dusty, a five-year-old feline from San Mateo, Calif., has taken hundreds of items during his nearly nightly heists. Owner Jean Chu told the San Francisco Chronicle that Dusty has pilfered gloves, towels, shoes and more since she adopted him from the humane society.

Dusty has a special love for swimsuits. Neighbour Kelly McLellan says Dusty stole her bikini — on two separate trips. McLellan said the cat appeared focused on keeping the ensemble.

Experts say Dusty's predatory instincts have gone astray, leaving him hunting for people's stuff.

► So what exactly does the Harry Potter author have up her sleeves? ► We don't know (even Daniel Radcliffe has no clue) but we sure had fun taking a guess

New Line of Fragrances

How likely it is to happen: 1/5

There is already a Harry Potter perfume out there but it surely does not hurt to smell like the many other characters in that magical universe. Professor Umbridge does seem awfully nice-smelling on screen, no?

A musical? A TV series?

How likely it is to happen: 2/5

It's a natural progression for books these days. If a film is done, let's head to Broadway! Or sell the rights to broadcasting companies and have their studios produce a full season of TV episodes. It's an old-trick but it certainly keeps the fans happy and the profits-margin sky high.

A Smartphone?

How likely it is to happen: 4/5

The online community is buzzing with excitement that a new Potter-product could be released next — and this time, a Smartphone. We love phones and the smarter the phones are, the happier we will be. However, unless this Potter Smartphone acts like the Elder Wand and we are able to cast actual spells with it, we are not too excited about it. (But if the screen lights up when we say "Lumos," we may just reconsider making a purchase.)

POTTERMORE?

NICHOLAS LIM
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

J.K. Rowling has launched a new website, Pottermore.com, but sadly and mysteriously, it holds little more than a pair of tree-perched owls and an enticing Coming Soon banner.

Clicking on the owls will bring you to a YouTube page that shows a timer, counting down to the day of an announcement, which is slated to happen June 23 at 12 p.m. British Summer Time.

No one in the world (well, except Rowling and her little team of cloak-wearing colleagues) knows what is hitting the Muggle world.

We can only speculate — and speculate we will!

GETTY IMAGES

This owl and the one you see at the bottom left greet you at the Pottermore page.

An Entirely New Book?

How likely it is to happen: 3/5

Rowling did say (many, many times) that there would not be a sequel to the Harry Potter series. However, she did not say that spin-offs and prequels and crossover novels are out of the question.

Harry Potter and the 8th Book

How likely it is to happen:

It is more possible that an owl will deliver your acceptance letter to Hogwarts tomorrow than hearing Rowling announcing an eighth book in the series. She is very particular about numbers and magic, and given how seven horcruxes come together in seven books so beautifully, it is very unlikely that Rowling will destroy her own masterpiece by adding an eighth book.

Harry's story ended on a perfect note, and unless Rowling has an even more perfect way to extend the story, we are betting that The Deathly Hallows is the last book. Yes, we are sad too but we have to move on, and the final film is waiting for us next month.

At least that is definitely going to happen.

Wake-up call for Amy Winehouse

Amy Winehouse's planned comeback tour ended abruptly on the first night after the troubled singer slouched through a Belgrade concert, dropping her microphone at times and letting a backup singer finish songs for her, according to the BBC.

The next two stops on the tour, in Istanbul and Athens, have been scrapped because "she cannot perform to the best of her ability" and feels "this is the right thing to do," her rep says. Doctors back in the U.K., where Winehouse recently paid a quick visit to rehab, are warning the singer that she has to finally clean up her act.

Carb intake

Besides reducing your carb intake, another way to reduce visceral belly fat is to exercise. Researchers at Duke University Medical Center say the more exercise you do, the better. To prevent visceral fat from accumulating, walk briskly for 30 minutes six times a week (or equivalent). To reverse visceral fat that's already there, boost the intensity or duration. CELIA MILNE

Food allergies affect about 1 in 13 U.S. kids; almost 40 per cent have bad reactions

Cutting the belly fat

► New research shows the science behind why carbs can cause belly fat ► Researchers say that findings are important because abdominal fat is known to increase diabetes and strokes

CELIA MILNE
LIFE@METRONews.ca

How do you get rid of that deep belly fat? Reduce carbs such as white rice, white bread and potatoes.

Visceral fat isn't what we think of as blubber. It's a very tenacious fat that lurks deep within our bodies, surrounding our vital organs, and it's really tough to get rid of. Too much visceral fat is known to increase your risk of developing type 2 diabetes, stroke and coronary artery disease. Even skinny people sometimes have excess visceral fat.

Researchers in the nutrition department of the University of Alabama did an experiment in which they put 69 healthy overweight men and women on one of two diets for 16 weeks.

People received either a reduced carb diet (43 per cent carbs, 18 per cent protein, 39 per cent fat) or a standard diet (55 per cent carbs, 18 per cent protein, and 27 per cent fat).

After eight weeks, the lower carb diet reduced insulin production in the body, thus resulting in loss of visceral fat. This occurred even though calorie intake was set for weight maintenance.

"This research is newsworthy because abdominal fat is known to increase risk of developing diseases such as type 2 diabetes, stroke, and coronary artery disease," says Barbara Gower, a professor in the department of nutrition sciences at University of Alabama. Decreasing carbs is a good way to reduce your risk of developing these chronic diseases without taking medication, she adds.

For the second eight weeks of the study, calorie intake was set for both groups to lose weight.

The lower carb group lost more total body fat than the standard diet group.

The study was presented recently to the Endocrine Society in Boston.

► No carbs? No kidding.

Half the man he used to be

BEN KNIGHT
LIFE@METRONews.ca

Almost a quarter of all Canadian men and women are obese.

At a time when the health risks of overeating are better understood than ever, why does this problem persist?

Why is it so difficult for many of us to heed the warnings, and get our appetites under control?

Bob Fisher can tell you. The 60-year-old Toronto native's weight peaked at 336 pounds before he finally sought the help of Overeaters Anonymous in 1982.

After 28 years in the program, he is — quite literally — half the man he used to be.

"I have lost half of me," he says.

"This morning, I weigh 169."

As Fisher recalls his journey into and away from obesity, it quickly becomes clear overeating is not a simple issue.

"What I found was I was using food to change the quality of my life," he recalls.

"It was my drug of choice. I never even recognized, really, what I was doing. Everyone told me it was a matter of willpower — and it had nothing to do with willpower."

It's not just a matter of stopping, then.

No amount of scary predictions from doctors, friends or family made any difference at all to Fisher.

"If knowing the risks

Statistics

Looking at the percentages of obese people.

got somebody to stop doing something, there would be no need for any of the programs to tell people to stop smoking, for example. I smoked 60 to 65 cigarettes a day. I haven't had a cigarette in 22 years."

So how does anyone ever break this vicious, potentially lethal cycle?

"The first thing you have to do is admit that whatever it is you're doing isn't working," Fisher says.

"And it's not just the food that is unmanageable. Everything is unmanageable. You say 'I'm not quite sure what will work,' but the first thing to do is admit there's a problem going on, and that extra piece of chocolate layer cake is not going to make it all better."

Many overweight people find themselves constantly judged by others. Fisher counters it is vitally important to remove judgment from the equation.

"Overeating is a disease. It doesn't make you a good person or a bad person. I don't say I was good with my food today. I simply say that I didn't eat compulsively today."

just the right size to share.

We both order pizzas on whole-wheat crust from the Signature Selection (Bistro $8.48). Bramoso makes a point of buying local as evident in its Gladiator pizza with three local meats — salami, back bacon and Italian sausage — as well as pepperoni, smoked bacon and a cheddar/mozzarella/provolone cheese blend, and a touch of tomato sauce.

Lombardy's Fire has several particularly-hot jalapeno slices balanced by the sweet/tangy flavour of pineapple as well as smoked bacon, and the same cheeses and red sauce. It's a palate-pleasing combo.

Bramoso hits the spot for a quick lunch; no complaints here.

ON MONEY

ALISON GRIFFITHS
MONEY@METRONEWS.CA

Is this you — or someone you know? Female, over 55, lower income and possibly an immigrant.

If so, there's help out there to navigate an increasingly complex financial world.

"The evidence is clear cut — older women are the most disadvantaged group financially, and this alone can lead to more difficulty as they age," says Alexandra Wilson, national project coordinator at the National Initiative for the Care of the Elderly (NICE).

With a tsunami of attention being focused on financial education in schools and credit and ► It's vital to develop an understanding about your finances, especially as you age.

debt education for indebted Canadians, older, low-income women have, until now, been largely forgotten.

The NICE project, funded by Status of Women Canada and sponsored by BMO, is rolling out a series of workshops in B.C., Ontario and Quebec aimed at putting financial tools in the hands of this vulnerable group.

The good news is that developing an understanding about money is very empowering. Just learning what programs are out there, such as the Guaranteed Income Supplement for those over 65, can give women a sense of relief about their future. Go to servicecanada.gc.ca and search for Guaranteed Income Supplement.

Each workshop will cover eight topics including developing a financial plan, preventing financial abuse and managing credit and debt.

Dealing with financial illiteracy at an older age can be one of the hardest things in the world. It's also very worrying for those who have an older, low-income woman as a family member or friend. But the often worry of what may become of her now has an answer.

NICE information

► If you don't live in one of the areas serviced by the workshops you can still access the information and very useful tools online at www.nicenet.ca — go to Projects then Older Women and Financial Literacy — the Financial Literacy for Older Adults Toolkit link is on the left-hand side.

Hello and welcome to my new weekly column. You might be wondering what a butler could possibly have to write about on a weekly basis — but before we get to that, why don't I tell you a little about myself.

As a butler, I have had the honour and privilege to work privately for one of Canada's most famous and gracious families. After many years, I left their employ in 1996 to open my company — Charles MacPherson Associates. It is based in Toronto where we have the only registered Butler Academy in North America. In addition to our Academy, we also place domestic and hospitality staff both in North America and globally. As well, we provide private training around the globe for luxury hotels and private residences.

In the past year alone, I have travelled and worked in London, Paris, Tokyo, Mumbai, Hyderabad, Dubai, New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Johannesburg. I invariably come home with a plethora of great stories and interesting cross-cultural knowledge. I have had the opportunity of meeting world leaders, movie stars, supermodels, royalty, millionaires and billionaires, and I'm now here to share my knowledge and experiences with you, the readers of Metro.

As Metro's new expert on social etiquette, I am here to answer all your questions relating to these issues.

From "Do I need to send a thank you note or can I just email or call?" to "What kind of gift is appropriate for a two-night cottage visit" to "My mother-in-law-to-be insists on being involved in all the decisions for my wedding and I don't know how to deal with her without making her feel bad" to "I drive a pretty beat up old car and wonder if it's appropriate to pick up a first date in it?"

So let's get busy! Send me your question to askcharlesthebutler@metronews.ca and remember to look for my column every Tuesday, starting next week!

Nelson fine with heavy lifting

RYAN TAPLIN/METRO FILE

► Steve Nelson throws a pitch for Dartmouth Moosehead Dry.

► Moosehead Dry star has started four of seven games ► Leads NSSBL with three wins, 1.80 ERA

MATTHEW WUEST
@METRONEWS.CA

Steve Nelson's arm is going to get a heavy workout this summer, but you won't catch him complaining.

Nelson, who has been one of the Nova Scotia Senior Baseball League's most dominant pitchers over the past five seasons, is being leaned on more than ever by Dartmouth Moosehead Dry following the off-season retirement of former MVP Jason Bailey.

The six-foot-three right-hander is rotating starts with Craig Langille, while Jeff Reeves has been outstanding in late-game relief. "I love it," said the Cole Harbour native. "The more action I can get, the better — I love to pitch. I always find it hard to watch and I'd much rather be out there."

If anyone is up to the task, it's Nelson. Since his four-year pro career in the Los Angeles Dodgers farm system ended in 2005, he has been named the NSSBL's top right-handed pitcher in four of his five seasons in the league.

He said his pro experience — which included three seasons of Class A ball — has helped him stay on top of his game.

"It all has to do with what you do away from the field, whether you're throwing some ice on your arm or doing some workouts after throwing 120 pitches to get the bad toxins out of your arm," he said.

The 28-year-old's foray into the pros has also been a benefit outside of baseball. His major-league rookie contract included a clause that paid for his post-secondary education, and he just finished his business degree at Mount Saint Vincent University.

"If you do things right in your contract, stay healthy and enjoy the game like I do, you can come home, not hang your head, get your education and continue to play the sport you love," Nelson said.

With Nelson carrying a heavy load, Dartmouth is off to a league-leading 6-1 start. Despite a small roster with few spares, the powerhouse club has a third straight championship in its sights.

"We've just gotta keep truckin'," Nelson said. "If we start making errors, getting frustrated with the game, that's going to hurt us. If we stay positive and make sure we're having fun with the guys we have, we're going to be fine."

Nadal, Williams make easy work of first round

Rafael Nadal opened his Wimbledon title defence with a convincing victory yesterday, beating Michael Russell 6-4, 6-2, 6-2 while his parents watched from the Royal Box.

The Spaniard put on a worthy performance to begin the 125th edition of the Wimbledon championship.

Five-time women's champion Venus Williams, back on her favourite grass surface, also swept into the second round with a 6-3, 6-1 win over 97th-ranked Akgul Amanmuradova of Uzbekistan.

Earlier, Canadian Milos Raonic made his Grand Slam grass-court singles debut with a 6-3, 7-6 (3), 6-3 victory over Frenchman Marc Gicquel.
